GOOD NEWS FOR HOMEMAKERS

Buying Shampoo

Shampo advertisements promise consumers just about everything. Some of them promise loads of lather, shine, bounce, no more split ends or tangles, fullness, the end of the greasies, balanced pH, protein treatment and fragrances for every taste. Some of them even promise more. The fact that shampoos should clean hair efficiently is often lost, understated or merely presumed in the avalance of manufacturer's cosmetic claims for their products.

Consumers searching for guidance in choosing shampoo may look longingly back to simpler days when people washed their hair with the same bar soap that they used to wash their bodies. Soap still works well in removing dirt and grease from surfaces, but also reacts with hard water to form gummy deposits of soap scums which dull hair lustre and make combing difficult. Shampoos with soap were commonly used with vinegar or lemon juice rinses to reduce this dulling effect.

Most of the champoos now on the market contain synthetic detergents as cleaning agents. Synthetic detergents are preferred because they clean better than soap and form no soap scum. They will perform adequately if today's consumer bought shampoo only for its cleaning action, but because consumers now expect shampoos to perform other cosmetic functions, manufacturer's try to develop products that not only clean, but also act as after - shampoo conditioners. The problem is making the products strong enough to clean well and mild enough to leave in natural oils, hair dyes and other desirable characteristics.

Shampoos now are mostly water, plus synthetic detergents, foaming agents and what has been referred to as the imaginary variety of other stuff of little or no value except as selling points. Dye is often added to make a shampoo's color match its fragrance, such as pink for strawberry. Other additives such as protein derivities, glycerin and ethyl alcohol are sometimes included as conditioners. Fragrances are added to mask other odors and to make products more marketable. Some manufacturers offer identical shampoos in several different fragrances to cater to different consumer tastes.

When the main cleaning ingredient in shampoo was changed from soap to synthetic detergent, the classification of shampoo by the Food and Drug Administration also changed. Shampoo with soap and soap are exempt from FDA regulations, but shampoo containing synthetic detergent falls within the legal definition of a cosmetic and is thus under FDA regulations. However, the FDA's authority to regulate cosmetics is not as comprehensive as its authority over foods and drugs. Shampoo makers don't need FDA approval before marketing a new product or using new additives, except color additives. Cosmetic manufacturers are solely responsible for the safety of their produce and are expected to conduct pre-marketing tests on animals and human. Only shampoos advertised as capable of controlling dandruff or otherwise altering body functions are classified and regulated as drugs by the FDA.

With the overwhelming choice of shampoos today, consumers need to do some comparison shopping and product testing to find a shampoo that meets their needs at a minimum cost. For example, despite advertising claims, pH balanced, low pH or non-alkaline shampoos are not necessarily less irritating to hair, skin and eyes than other shampoos. Some low-pH shampoos also contain ingredients that can sting the eyes.

Consumers who buy protein enriched shampoo in hopes of healing split ends may be disappointed with the results. Protein derivities can only coat hair strands, gluing together split ends, giving only the appearance of repaired hair. Adults who use baby shampoos may not realize that such mild products work best on infant hair because it is not filmed with deposits of hair spray and other hair products.

Special formula shampoos for dry and oily hair are made by varying the amount of strength of synthetic detergent and conditioner additives. In at least one-consumer use survey, panelists with dry hair preferred the oily formulas and those with oily hair evaluated the dry hair formulas as superior.

Differences in shampoos can be as insignificant as the change in the fragrance or as major as use of a stronger detergent. How well a particular brand performs is based on such variables as type and length of hair, frequency of shampoo and use of other hair products. Consumers dissatisfied with their present brands or skeptical of advertising claims can test a variety of shampoos by buying small size of on-sale brands, less highly advertised brands and store brands.

BY
CALVIN ROBINSON

June is breaking out all over. Adding to Nature's display is the beauty of roses in bloom. I see them most everywhere I go, on trellises, in gardens, indoors. Am reminded of the famous lines of the Bard of Scotland, Bobby Burns. Many years ago he wrote:

"O, my luve is like a red, red rose,
That's newly sprung in June."

At the moment, the conclusion of the school session is tops on most everyone's agenda. High schools, academies, colleges are sending forth a great class of graduates. We salute them, one and all. Appomattox is ably represented. I was honored a few days ago when Richard Lewis Wingfield Jr. came by to see me, bringing along the Y.M.I. yearbook. He was in this year's graduating class and is headed for the U. S. Navy. Told me a lot about his favorite sport, Rugby and had pictures to show. Charles Thomas Moses III, also of Appomattox, was another leading V.M.I. graduate. My note pad lists other Appomattox students and their colleges, such as Warren Coleman and Richard Ferguson, but 'tis best not to attempt to name them all for fear of overlooking some. Good luck, Class of '79.

• • •

It is always timely to salute those who have completed or are entering a career as nurses or allied professions. Seems that Appomattox has a large list of patients at area hospitals anytime you check. Many of our finest people are serving in the field of health care. It is a noble career.

• • •

My friend, Ralph Barlow was by to bring me a recent issue of The Coastland Times, of Manteo and Kill Devil Hills, N. C. Ralph was in a party from Appomattox visiting The Outer Banks and they were enthusiastic about their trip. I used to visit Dare County, the Outer Banks, etc. regularly and have been in the plant of The Time. Francis W. Meekins is Editor. Manteo is the scene of the outdoor drama, The Lost Colony. Note . . the Manteo school teams are called The Redskins. Four years there has been talk of an ocean front highway from Norfolk to Hatteras. The problem is that there would have to be so many bridges, running up the cost. North Carolina highways have 16,151 bridges. One county has 529 bridges. I am a grandson of North Carolina, my late father having been a Tar Heel. I forgot to ask Ralph if they still have "pole wells" in Eastern Carolina. They used to be a landmark. Ah yes, and such wonderful seafood. There is a Robinson General Store at Hatteras. No relation. Comment . . . see Virginia first, but bordering states abound with attractions. And to save fuel, do a lot of planning in making selections, routing, etc.

• • •

Appomattox is growing, and so is Virginia. Virginia has forty cities and 95 counties and the 1980 Census is expected to show a total of 5.3 million, up from 4.65 in 1970.

• • •

Biggest boom in population is among gnats. Posted signs do not help. Martha Street news flash . . . a rabbit is standing in readiness where I planted carrots. Gardens are off to a good start and nice rains have helped.

• • •

Thanks for reading and seeya next week. Stay well everybody and drive carefully.

Dr. Clyde O'Brien, left, Chairman of the Appomattox County Fund Raising Project for Holiday Lake; Susan Bailey, center, President of the Appomattox County Chamber of Commerce; and Charles Elliott, left, of the Virginia Extension Service, and speaker for the evening; are shown holding brochure concerning the Holiday Lake Education Facility now getting underway.

Holiday Lake 4-H Education Center Program Presented at C of C Meeting

Following dinner at the John Mosby Inn Restaurant on Tuesday evening, May 29th, members and guests of the Appomattox County Chamber of Commerce enjoyed a slide presentation and talk on the Holiday Lake 4-H Education Center, a new continuing education facility for the people of Virginia.

Dr. Clyde G. O'Brien, Chairman, Appomattox County Fund Raising Project at Holiday Lake, introduced Mr. Charles Elliott, Virginia Extension Service, the speaker for the evening.

"Let me live while I am alive . . ." said Mr. Elliott as he spoke with great enthusiasm of the new year-round center that Central Virginia is building at Holiday Lake.

It was in the late 1930's that plans were completed for creating a lake and a special camp in the middle of what may have seemed to some to be nothing but wilderness, located approximately 15 miles east of Appomattox. By 1941, young people from all over Virginia were flocking to the facility, which had been named Holiday Lake 4-H Camp.

By 1970, over a thousand boys and girls each year were enjoying the facilities of a full-fledged summer education-al camp. People were watching and they liked what they saw . . . young people learning by doing, enjoying educational experiences that could not be found in the conventional classroom. Thoughts began to turn in the direction of expansion, turning the summer 4-H camp into a year-round continuing education facility for youngsters and adults.

The dream is beginning to materialize, the work has already begun. A 400 person meeting hall and dining room, modern, fully equipped kitchen, lodging facilities for 400 individual lodges with kitchens and meeting rooms, a complete waterfront, tennis courts, stables, on olympic-size swimming pool and more.

As Mr. Elliott, a graduate of Hampton Institute and Cornell University, with thirty-four years of extension work to his credit, talked about the development of Holiday Lake 4-H Camp as an educational facility, he pointed out the importance of recreation, leisure, comfort and beauty to successful earning. He also pointed out that, even in
